WEDNESDAY EVEN'G., SEPTEMBER 10

Folded Away.

Day by day we fold away Some treasure that our heart holds dear-Some treasured thing to which we cling, And bless with many a kies and tear.

A shred of lice may hold a place That jewe's rire could never wir: With love notold a ribbon old Is laid our dearest shrine within.

A little tress we fordly press Unto a heart that sches with pain. Then with a sigh for days gone by We fold it from our sight again.

And is there not a hallowed spot In memory's casket Ising low, Where day by day we fold away Our heart thoughts lest the world should know? Many a one now lost and gone, In sweet day-dreamings we behold, Who in our sleep come back to keep

With us their vigils as of old. And yet, alas! such creams must pass; Life's sterner duties must be met! Quickly we turn and strive to learn The cruel lesson to forget!

When from the gleam of love's sweet dream Our hearts awake in sad surprise, How dim'y burn where'er we turn The lesser lights that meet our eyes! When c'er the dead our tears are shed,

While on the silent lips we press The last fond kiss-oh! is not this The sammit of life's loneliness? And yet we know though all lie low

Whom we have ever loved or known, Still we must live and learn to give To carth the claims it calls its own. Oh! grief untold, with hearts grown old.

Like flowers blighted is a day, How foodly then from sight of men We fold our dear dead loves away!
